

Duke school report

What does a winning Duke application entail?

- Academic Excellence and Passion for Extracurricular Activities:
Duke University values academic excellence, so you should strive to have a strong academic record and standardized test scores. In addition to academics, you should also demonstrate a passion for extracurricular activities such as sports, music, arts, or community service. The key is to showcase your unique talents and interests to stand out from other applicants.
- Family Activity:
To demonstrate your family values and relationships, include at least one family activity in your application. This could be volunteering together, participating in a cultural event, or engaging in a shared hobby. By showcasing your family values, you can demonstrate that you are a well-rounded person who values relationships and connections.
- Participation in Sports:
Duke is known for its strong basketball program, so highlighting your involvement in sports, particularly basketball, could demonstrate your fit with the university's culture and values. However, any sports involvement can be a valuable addition to your application, as it shows that you are active, disciplined, and a team player.
- FGLI Status:
Being a first-generation, low-income (FGLI) applicant can demonstrate resilience, resourcefulness, and determination in the face of adversity. Therefore, emphasize your FGLI status in your essays and showcase how your personal experiences have shaped your academic and personal goals. This can demonstrate your ability to overcome challenges and succeed in college. I highly recommend using the African card.
- Interdisciplinary Learning:
Duke values interdisciplinary learning and encourages students to explore different academic disciplines and connect ideas across fields. To showcase your interest in interdisciplinary learning, highlight any courses you have taken that bridge multiple disciplines or research projects that demonstrate your ability to integrate knowledge from multiple fields.
- Community Service and Activism:
Duke places a high value on community service and activism, so highlight any volunteer work or activism that you have engaged in, particularly if it relates to issues that are important to Duke's mission and values. Whether it is starting a foundation to counter jiggers or working to improve the drainage in your community, demonstrate your commitment to making a positive impact on the world.

- Overall, a winning Duke application should demonstrate academic excellence, extracurricular involvement, a passion for making a difference in the world, and an ability to think across disciplines. Use your application to showcase your unique strengths, interests, and experiences that demonstrate your fit with Duke's mission and values. Be good at one thing, well-rounded not all-rounded!
