

SAT- Although Princeton is test optional, a good test score gives you a higher edge over other applicants. Try aiming for 1500 and above.

Princeton seeks for applicants who have strong academic records and a healthy dose of inquisitiveness. Furthermore, they ought to have striven for and accomplished academic success.

They also seek out pupils that have great extracurricular and personal accomplishments.

The graded written paper is the distinguishing feature of the Princeton application; it is an opportunity to show the Admissions Office more of the student's written expression in a formal academic context.

The graded written work needs to have a unifying theme and demonstrate how the candidate has interacted with or comprehended their environment or surrounds.

The reader seems to be drawn to themes like FGM, pollution, current global events like COVID, poverty, etc.

Princeton University is a pro- writing institution, therefore students should have experimented with writing assignments beyond those assigned in class, like research theses or compelling argumentative essays.

Activities: Consider applying for an internship that in some way demonstrates your maturity. Try your best to participate in international activities to distinguish yourself from other Kenyan aspirants.
