

A good Stanford application entails:

- ❖ Branding in line with the interest of the school; mostly academic whereby you will be at an advantage should you successfully present yourself such that you match your particular department of interest.
 - Music brand, on the other hand, whether portrayed in a academic viewpoint or otherwise, can give one a heads high in Stanford's application. (Stanford is quite high on music related stuff - as I have seen in a past application with music brand that got in and the opportunities present at stanford)
 - Professionalism comes in handy. It comprises having great achievements in your field of interest and showing great talent in the associated disciplines. Also highlighting your future professional plans in an optimistic and confident manner is important. (All these can appear through the honors to activities to additional information)
- ❖ Test scores and excellent high school grades are key. (SAT above 1500 and a good transcript)
- ❖ In tackling the essays;
 - Show maturity in your writing
 - To breakdown some of the prompts:

- Challenge facing the world - Talk about something unique yet global that everyone will see sense in agreeing to it or a problem you have observed among your community that transcends geography - this later part can be presented anecdotally.
 - Historical moment - Talk of an event that might have been deemed quite controversial, one that shows diversity in perspective or an unpopular though sound view.
 - Intellectual vitality - Advisably, make your writing here heavy with jargon on the topic you'll choose giving various experiences and how they shaped you and instilled the hunger to learn. Show expertise if you already have or the yearning for expertise and what drives you.
 - Roommate essay - Describe yourself and where you come from(your family included), stating values that distinguish you as a possible charming-to-live-with, exciting, admirable or questionable(amazingly) character. Show diversity and throw in your love for some weird but cool stuff, be it tv shows, novels, fun activity(mind privilege)
 - Something meaningful to you and why - Advisably again, you may treat this as a diversity essay, and discuss topics like race, sexuality, culture, etc. Also you can talk of a hardship and how you utilized particular skill set or trait that you possess to tackle it. A chance to showcase your global citizenship should be taken advantage of. Generally ensure you answer both parts of the prompt in a progressive way.

- ❖ Conclusively, Stanford has admitted applicants who show commitment to the choice of major they applied with and mostly who have tackled the essays as explained above.
