RE: RECOMMENDATION LETTER FOR SAMUEL GARIY OTIENO, ADMISSION NUMBER 11085

I am pleased to contribute to Samuel's application to your school. I have known Samuel right from Form One as his teacher of Biology and his House Mistress. I have witnessed his growth, from the gifted young boy he was then to the now focused, well-mannered gentleman and still gifted gentleman he now is.

Samuel was brilliant yet studious, disciplined and a down to earth young man who made tremendous contributions to the general welfare of my class. Moreover, he was able to maintain the top position in class throughout his four years of high school. His virtues endeared him to both his peers and teachers, who found him a valuable asset for the actualization of goals. For instance, based on his unique ability to create unity of purpose in a class of more than fifty students, and his profound ability to articulate his thoughts, I nominated him to be the class captain. A nomination that was unanimously agreed upon by his classmates. Indeed, he worked so relentlessly that he was promoted to the school's academic department as the assistant captain in his fourth year. Despite this promotion, he was devoted to supporting the new class captain in supervising the class. A devotion he demonstrated as he took the helm when the class captain stepped down due to personal reasons. He was able to handle both dockets despite the intense pressure involved.

In my Biology class, I was able to point out that Samuel was not only widely read, but was also quite critical in analyzing concepts and challenging the plausibility of the content he was taught in class. This was evident through the highly valued discussions he initiated in class. These provoked the interest of other students who benefited from his intelligent contributions. In addition to this, Samuel also took his assignments seriously and even went the extra mile. These always resulted in sterling grades. During the practical lessons, he was always most attentive to instructions. This explains his high level of accuracy, as he would not give room for error! He also took correction positively wherever he erred and took it as a chance to better himself as well as his fellow students. As an information technology student, he would help us operate the equipment at the resource center whenever we used the audio-visual room for Biology presentations. Samuel was indeed reliable, devoted, flexible and dynamic, and this proved beneficial to all those around him.

Samuel's active participation in the activities he was passionate about greatly contributed to his personal development. He was not only a member, but also a leader in the Math Society, the AKAD mentorship team and the World Scholar's Club among others. Few among these were his exploits in the Small Premier League Club which were truly exceptional. The team in itself consisted of good soccer players who did not make the cut for the actual school team. He nonetheless inspired the team to buy jerseys and train every day for the entire of his final year, and in their final game they beat the actual school team!

I was impressed by the high level of commitment that Samuel showed to his house, Livingstone. He was keen on ensuring his house excelled in all spheres. He especially made a significant contribution in striving for excellence in sports within the house by laying a lot of emphasis on practice. He also took time to make motivational speeches to encourage and inspire house members during house meetings. Owing to his remarkable leadership, the house won the inter-house competitions. As a result, it was the best house in the whole school for two years in a row. An award it had last received a decade ago!

The spirit of humanitarianism is ever alive in Samuel. He always looks out for his peers and puts their needs before his own. He took time to talk to Form Ones who were homesick this being their first time living away from home; helping them settle quickly and comfortably in our school. Outside the school, he is an active member of his local church Kahawa Sukari Baptist Church where he takes part in organizing local outreach games for the street children. Here In collaboration with a local children's home a total of twenty children have been rehabilitated back to society.

Indeed, Samuel's ability to balance his curricular, extra-curricular and leadership responsibilities is rare and remarkable. Based on the abilities he has seamlessly demonstrated here, he will ardently deliver what is expected of him, given the opportunity and I strongly recommend him as a member of your institution.

Yours Sincerely

Dinah Kulecho
