Dear Admissions Committee,

RE: RECOMMENDATION LETTER FOR VARLEEN NEEMA BIKETI
COMMON APP ID: 30131041

It is with high esteem that I write about one of the most versatile students I have interacted with; Varleen Neema Biketi. Having been the director of studies in the school for close to four years, I have observed her brilliant both in and out of class, establishing a balance between academics and other activities within the school.

Varleen took into serious consideration the well-being of other students while in school. In her second year of high school, Varleen and four other students in her class were the remnants of a club, Raising Up Young Achievers, commonly known as RUYA. The group, which was mainly established to support underprivileged students from donations from other members in the school, had been truncating in numbers every term. Spearheading a well-formulated plan, Varleen and her friends sold handmade pencil pouches and raised enough money to print out blue t-shirts with the club initials. They wore them every Thursday, went from one class to the next, talking about the club and its benefits. After about two weeks, they had breathed life into the club. In 2019, the club became so popular that, together with supporting teachers, they organized a RUYA walk, raising awareness of this to the school board and the local community. With this, a total of 67 000 shillings was collected from donations that day from parents, neighbors, and other well-wishers. A new school record. This covered shopping for 36 students and partially covering school fee balances for 14 of them. Every year since the club organizes a walk, all credited to Varleen and her four friends. They brought back a virtue to the school which had been for very long forgotten. Those 36 girls and the exponential numbers every year after that are indebted to her.

She has maintained stellar performance all through her four years of high school. Though I never taught her class, I came to know her by noticing one name that without fail would rank among the top in her class, with her lowest rank being 5 out of 320 students. In school-based academic competitions, she invariably came out on top, the most recent being the INEOS mathematics challenge. Varleen holds the school record in the competition, where she completed 34 advanced mathematics questions with about an hour to spare in the allocated time. The record time alone was astounding, but what impressed us as a staff was that she had a perfect score, even after multiple mathematics teachers went through her work looking for the slightest error. This was something that no other student in the school's history had ever achieved. She would habitually be outside the staff room at four PM with a book and pen in hand, waiting to consult a teacher. She was so consistent that at precisely 4.10 PM every day, I would routinely stand outside the staff room to call any teacher she requested, fascinated by her want for knowledge. All the teachers she consulted spoke in high praise of her, mentioning how she was a great mind to cultivate and her willingness to accept corrections though she was one of the school's finest students. Even now, after Varleen has left, I sometimes forget and stand outside the staff room, waiting for her to get there.

Varleen did outstanding work being a dining hall captain for three years. She championed repairing the wooden tiles in the hall, seeing how the cooks would struggle during cleaning. She wrote a letter to the school board explaining the situation, which previous dining hall captains never did. Even after turning her down the first few times, she persistently wrote to them for four more months until they re-tiled the whole dining hall. The cooks in the dining hall will never forget her name because she made their work easier. After the Covid-19 seven-month break, when the students came back to school, it wasn't proving easy to maintain social distance and all other measures in the dining hall. Varleen consulted with the school cateress to have two of the school's tents placed directly outside the dining hall to create more room and even helped initiate the cafeteria system of serving to minimize the risk of spreading the virus. The tents not only enabled the school to keep the measures but also became a temporary solution to the problem of congestion in the dining hall as a new one is under construction, all thanks to her.

Varleen's undertakings have proven her to be a multifaceted student. She serves as evidence that a student can do it all, juggling varied activities in school. Given the opportunity, I am confident she will effect fantastic transformation at your institution.

Yours sincerely,

Felix Samkul
