and opportunities that they would want to take advantage of.

Recommendations

Recommendations

These provide insight about an applicant through the lens of other people who know the applicant at a PERSONAL level

You can get recommendations from your high school counselor, subject teachers, employers, friends etc

The basic requirement is to have a counselor recommendation and two other recommendations from subject teachers.

All recommendations have to be personal ie show that the recommender knew you at a personal level. Not the generic "so and so was hard working, intelligent, wise, brilliant, clean etc"

However, schools that don't use common app for their applications or schools that are outside the US will have a different recommendation requirement that you can find out at each of the specific schools admissions websites

Only take the test when you're adequately prepared.

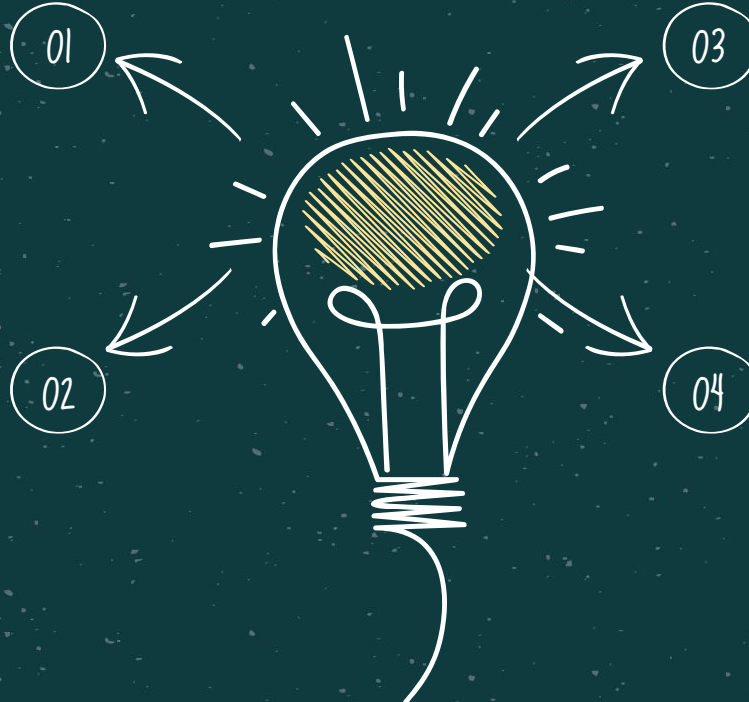

Almost all colleges are test-optional during this application cycle

If you choose to do the test, mentors will help you to the best of their abilities with the relevant resources.

Financial Aid

$ 75000

- This is the average cost of attendance per year at a private college in the US which translates to around $8 million a year. An insane amount of money!
This is why you'll need financial aid

Types of Financial Aid

Institutional Aid

Money made available by the school that one applies to in order to sponsor students who demonstrate financial need or are exceptional

Types of institutional aid include: need based aid and merit based aid. The latter is usually awarded to students who demonstrated exceptional ability in areas such as academics or leadership in their applications

Organisational Aid

Scholarships Provided by organisations, such as MCF

Need Based Aid

During your application process, an important component will be your family's financial situation that is meant to provide details that will be used to evaluate you for need based aid.

You will need to complete the CSS profile or ISFAA and file them to the schools you are applying to before the application deadline.

Generally, the forms(CSS and ISFAA) will request details about your family's income, expenses, dependants, savings, scholarships and assets.

Admissions Policies and financial Aid (Need blind vs Need aware)

Schools adopt one of the two admissions policies when reviewing your application

Need blind admission policy means that the schools reviews your application independent of your financial aid application. The decision to accept or reject you is not tied to your family's ability to pay for the cost of attendance

Need aware admissions policy means that the school takes into consideration your financial need before rendering a decision. Essentially, the school only accepts you if and only if they can support your demonstrated need
